

Ally Bubb Bio

Ally Bubb has a punk rock soul cleverly disguised in a middle-aged mom's body. She combines enthusiasm, honesty, and authenticity into her work as an executive career coach and speaker, teaching people to tell compelling career stories and step into their next level of leadership because when people genuinely love what they do, our workplaces, homes, and world are transformed. After 20 years in corporate technology roles, she is passionate about fixing the leak in the technology pipeline by equipping women and non-binary individuals to leverage their distinctive strengths in leadership creating more equity at all levels. She is the bestselling author of Success Authentically and Change Authentically.

Ally earned a B.S. in Management of Information Systems from Michigan Technological University and a M.B.A. from University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. She is an entrepreneur, coach, keynote speaker, and author, as well as a thrift shopper, nature-lover, cat cuddler, and parent to two spirited kids.

Work Authentically is reinventing the world of work by teaching people to leverage their unique style, approach, and way of being while helping companies to do better by leveraging people-centric approaches through presentations, workshops, and individual and group coaching.
